17th Sunday in Ordinary Time –B 2015

My brothers and sisters in the Lord!

One message which can be taken to heart from the miraculous feeding of the crowd, which we hear about in today's Gospel, is the importance of sharing what we have with those who are less well off, especially with those who are starving. Our Lord asks us to give ourselves and our resources generously to Him and to place what we have and are at His disposal. In essence, that is exactly what the boy in the Gospel did with all that he had: five loaves and two fish. We can easily picture this young boy's bewilderment when he is asked to give what has, to part with the only food that is available. But his sacrifice is well rewarded when he witnesses the miracle with the food he has provided. Through the power and prayer of Jesus, the impossible becomes a reality. The crowd is fed and it symbolizes that that Jesus has come to give life to all people.

My brothers and sisters, the hungry multitude is still with us, crying out for the basic necessities of life. The sheer size of the problem may make us wonder what we have to offer. We can draw inspiration from the young boy's generosity. The Lord did not dismiss his offering and he won't dismiss ours. We just need to do things from our hearts. It is in using our little efforts that God chooses to produce great miracles.

Thankfulness for what we have can be a beginning because every day we live in this world is a miracle of God's divine providence, much greater than the feeding of the multitude but, because it happens with such regularity, we give it no thought. This Gospel passage should make us think about thanking God, not only for our food but for the many blessings and benefits that come our way each day of our life which we take so much for granted.

Peace,
Fr. Joe

STEWARDSHIP OF TREASURE

"There is a boy here who has five barley loaves and two fish; but what good are these for so many?" (JOHN 6:9)

The miracle of the Loaves and Fish is the only miracle which is recorded six times in the Gospel. It carries two important messages. First, no matter how little we have, we always have enough to share. Second, Christ can take our humble gifts and do great things with them if we are just willing to let Him.

Summary Report
Response
Lineamenta for the XIV Ordinary Synod of Bishops
Archdiocese of Newark
April 15, 2015

Statement Four

The modern world reveals to us the various forms of union between persons. These include those cohabitating without the fullness of Christian marriage, those who are separated, and those who are divorced and seeking not only the sacraments but remarriage and/or Church annulment. The Christian community is also called pastorally and through the Gospel to give attention to those with homosexual tendencies.

The statement above and the following summary are a response to the following questions from the Lineamenta, 22.1, 22.2, 22.3, 33, 37, 38.3, 40, 40.1, 40.2, 40.3

In the view of these situations, there is a desire for a more welcoming attitude and environment on the part of the Church and its clergy, to combat the perception that people are not accepted or wanted as members of the Church. This is in light of the understanding and belief that every human being is searching for God and possesses the seed of God's Natural Law in their heart. There is recognition that Natural Law is not clearly understood. Strong suggestions reinforced the Church's beautiful and powerful theology of Marriage while expressing the need for these teachings to be shared, highlighted and proclaimed in new ways. The use of modern media and the witness of the Christian couples, with greater support for the "already married" were suggested methods of communication.

The attitude of the Church toward those cohabitating without the fullness of Christian marriage has to be one of compassion, acceptance, evangelization and formation, along with a better understanding of the complexities often surrounding these relationships. A need to highlight the beauty of Christian marriage and the sacramental nature of the marriage covenant were expressed. A consistent theme was to "accept people where they are", in order to lead them to a more comprehensive understanding of Christian Marriage.

A sharp difference of opinion existed on the subject of admitting divorced and remarried persons to Communion without previously receiving an annulment, along with disapproval of using Eucharist as a form of reinforcing the pain of marital break-up. Those who are separated, and those who are divorced and seeking not only the sacraments but remarriage and/or Church annulment are in need "of a greater pastoral sensitivity." The denial of Eucharist can emphasize the "disconnection" between the Church and its people. The Church/ clergy need to be more pastoral and consider each case individually while respecting the primacy of conscience in these matters. There were request for change in the Church's policy, perhaps learning from the Orthodox Church or the Jewish practice of a "get". The distinct disagreements on the subject of annulments revealed a general need for more information on the process and its implementation.

In light of the Gospel, the Christian community is called pastorally to serve and love individuals with homosexual tendencies and families that include members with homosexual tendencies providing not only a support system for them, but also educational workshops to clarify the teachings of the Church regarding homosexual relationships, chastity, and human sexuality in general. The increasing societal acceptance of same-sex relationships is seen as positive. There were positive and negative comments about the validity of Natural Law thinking on same-sex relationships with some supporting the Church's view and others stating the Church is out of touch. The Church needs to be compassionate to those with homosexual tendencies and ask of itself "What would Jesus say/do. There was also concern over the use of the word "tendencies" as this was seen to be dismissive of the reality. While acknowledging the struggle, these concerns also spoke of a desire to remain faithful to the Church.

More specifically caring for those in the variety unions such as separated, divorced not remarried, divorced and remarried from pastoral role of the Marriage Tribunal. (q. 36, 37, 38, 39)

Any pastoral guidelines in responding to these pastoral needs would first require that specific guidelines exist and or need to be prepared. Such guidelines might be distributed through existing means of communication such as print materials, social media or workshop settings. The rich ethnic and cultural diversity of the People of God, a beautiful gift in the Church may, however, prove to be a challenge in providing universal or consistent guidelines. Regarding the simplification, streamlining and affordability of the annulment process it might be easiest to begin with the practical. Here in the Archdiocese of Newark only 15% of budgeted expenses for the Tribunal are met through fees. Any change here would have financial impact on ministry elsewhere in the Archdiocese.

The annulment process has certain "problems" in its efforts to reconcile the parties with the church and in being understood. In his Annual Address to the Roman Rota, the Holy Father seemed to be inviting the canonical world to take another look at Canon 1099, (Error about the substance of Marriage) as a possibility of proving invalidity of marriage where the parties did not seem to take seriously the teachings of the church about the elements and purpose of marriage. Not all failed marriages are invalid and many invalid marriages cannot be declared such for the lack of evidence. These realities underscore the challenge for the average person to understand what an annulment is. For those who do proceed with the annulment process it might be of value to eliminate the requirement for a judicial review of all affirmative decisions.

(Over)

The Orthodox practice is not supported by a good or strong theology. Some priests today deal with the distinction between an objectively sinful situation and extenuating circumstances by employing a solution applicable only in the internal forum. If we are unable to find a path to the sacraments for truly contrite divorced and remarried Catholics who cannot in good conscience abandon their current spouse, this approach may grow. Developing a new approach which would affirm the dignity and indissolubility of marriage in the mind of Christ, and at the same time, affirm and make available the forgiveness which Jesus brings into our world through his church, would be a very big change, challenging the unity of the Church.

With regard to mixed marriages, the Church assumes the notion that all children of such marriages will be baptized and reared as Catholics. The declaration of the Catholic party to, "do all in my power" to raise the children as Catholics, provides for flexibility in this discussion, a difficult question.

Marriage preparation, early years of marriage, family

Currently twenty three parishes in the Archdiocese of Newark assist with marriage preparation in the form of hosting and facilitating Pre Cana Programs. Of these twenty three parishes only two responded to a request for assistance with this survey. The following summary therefore is limited in its scope and ability to respond to the following questions from the Lineamenta, (8,9,10,11,12,22,28,29,30, 31, 32, 33).

Pre Cana formation or marital formation begins when people are young and much before the time they are planning for marriage. Herein lies the challenge of formal "marriage preparation" as it responds to the lived experience of many young couples exposed to unstable or broken homes and a culture which does not necessarily promote the value of a Christian marriage. The understanding and value of commitment appears to be skewed and any sense of the Church as an authority or even a caring partner in the journey of relationship is challenged. There is an individualism which impacts relational values within the couple's own relationship and the understanding of their relationship in the community. The idea that God can be a part of this relationship is difficult for some engaged and married couples to grasp.

Marital preparation begins long before dating and engagement. Marital preparation begins with understanding the beauty of living life well before marriage as part of marriage preparation. Helping single people and certainly engaged or married couples to see their relationship as good for them, their future, their family and society will assist with drawing them more deeply into accepting the possibility that God and the Church have something to contribute to their relationship. Those involved in marriage preparation need to be faith-filled couples who exude joy and stability in their marriage and who possess a love for the Church and her teachings on marriage.

Conclusion

This report as prepared by the Office of Family Life for the Archdiocese of Newark is a summary of respondent's reflections, concerns, hopes and desires for the Church in response to the questions presented in the Lineamenta document. The Office attempted to convey the information as presented to it without prejudice, interpretation or judgement. As in any undertaking such as this, opinions, thoughts and feelings will vary widely, but overwhelmingly, this Office encounter considered heartfelt responses from the laity in regard to the statements and questions posed. In all instances, the respondents reacted enthusiastically to this opportunity to contribute to the 2015 Synod on the Family, and were grateful for the opportunity.
